How Not to Say the Wrong Thing

by Susan Silk and Barry Goldman

It works in all kinds of crises – medical, legal, even existential. It’s the ‘Ring Theory’ of kvetching.

The first rule is comfort in, dump out.

When Susan had breast cancer, we heard a lot of lame remarks, but our favorite came from one of Susan’s colleagues. She wanted, she needed, to visit Susan after the surgery, but Susan didn’t feel like having visitors, and she said so. Her colleague’s response? “This isn’t just about you.”

“It’s not?” Susan wondered. “My breast cancer is not about me? It’s about you?”

The same theme came up again when our friend Katie had a brain aneurysm. She was in intensive care for a long time and finally got out and into a step-down unit. She was no longer covered with tubes and lines and monitors, but she was still in rough shape. A friend came and saw her and then stepped into the hall with Katie’s husband, Pat. “I wasn’t prepared for this,” she told him. “I don’t know if I can handle it.”

This woman loves Katie, and she said what she did because the sight of Katie in this condition moved her so deeply. But it was the wrong thing to say. And it was wrong in the same way Susan’s colleague’s remark was wrong.

Susan has since developed a simple technique to help people avoid this mistake. It works for all kinds of crises: medical, legal, financial, romantic, even existential. She calls it the Ring Theory.

Draw a circle. This is the center ring. In it, put the name of the person at the center of the current trauma. For Katie’s aneurysm, that’s Katie. Now draw a larger circle around the first one. In that ring put the name of the person next closest to the trauma. In the case of Katie’s aneurysm, that was Katie’s husband, Pat. Repeat the process as many times as you need to. In each larger ring put the next closest people. Parents and children before more distant relatives. Intimate friends in smaller rings, less intimate friends in larger ones. When you are done you have a Kvetching Order. One of Susan’s patients found it useful to tape it to her refrigerator.

Here are the rules. The person in the center ring can say anything she wants to anyone, anywhere. She can kvetch and complain and whine and moan and curse the heavens and say, “Life is unfair” and “Why me?” That’s the one payoff for being in the center ring.

Everyone else can say those things too, but only to people in larger rings.

When you are talking to a person in a ring smaller than yours, someone closer to the center of the crisis, the goal is to help. Listening is often more helpful than talking. But if you’re going to open your mouth, ask yourself if what you are about to say is likely to provide comfort and support. If it isn’t, don’t say it. Don’t, for example, give advice. People who are suffering from trauma don’t need advice. They need comfort and support.

So say, “I’m sorry” or “This must really be hard for you” or “Can I bring you a pot roast?” Don’t say, “You should hear what happened to me” or “Here’s what I would do if I were you.” And don’t say, “This is really bringing me down.”

If you want to scream or cry or complain, if you want to tell someone how shocked you are or how icky you feel, or whine about how it reminds you of all the terrible things that have happened to you lately, that’s fine. It’s a perfectly normal response. Just do it to someone in a bigger ring.

Comfort IN, dump OUT.

There was nothing wrong with Katie’s friends saying she was not prepared for how...
The number of patients and families served has likewise grown. In 1998, Montgomery Hospice had 640 patients. At the time of the office move to Piccard Drive, Montgomery Hospice was caring for more than 1,000 patients annually. In 2012, we served more than 2,000 patients and families. A particularly strong testament to Ann’s leadership is that Montgomery Hospice has been continuously accredited by The Joint Commission during her tenure, starting with a survey conducted five months after she started work. This rigorous accreditation program has healthcare quality and safety as its goal.

I am particularly pleased by Ann’s ongoing commitment to the bereavement program and to providing charity care for our neighbors who are uninsured or under-insured. Her support of Montgomery Hospice’s newest program, Montgomery Kids, demonstrates further her dedication to meeting the unmet needs of the community.

As we face an ever-changing healthcare landscape, I am confident that Montgomery Hospice will continue its long history of excellence under the continuing leadership of Ann Mitchell. On behalf of the entire board, I would like to wish Ann a Happy 15th Anniversary, and thank her for all she’s done for the people of Montgomery County.

Contrary to popular myth, grief is not about letting go of our loved ones, it’s about learning to hold onto them in new ways as we move forward with our lives. Often our society expects a brief time of grief after a loss followed by a quick return to normal as we somehow let go and move on. If we dare to open up and talk about the challenges of our grieving several months later, we are typically met with awkward and impatient responses that send the message, “haven’t you gotten over this and moved on yet?” The reality is grieving takes time and is more like a journey into new places than a brief episode with a definite ending.

With gentleness and patience, we can learn to hold onto our loved ones in new ways that feel comforting and good. We can do this through the stories we share about them with others. We can also find that certain of their possessions take on a sentimental value because they remind us of something we cherish in our loved one. We visit the cemetery or keep the ashes in a special place because it helps us to feel near to them. We engage in rituals of remembrance like planting a tree or installing a memorial marker or toasting them at a family holiday gathering. Montgomery Hospice offers annual opportunities like this with our Tree of Lights ceremony at Brookside Gardens and our Cobblestone dedication at Casey House. We can also hold onto them when we take inspiration from their lives and take up a cause in their memory. Sometimes, we even find that we talk to them, either in our minds or out loud, and this can bring comfort and a sense of their nearness. The fact that many people actually have bits of conversation with their loved ones may be one of the best kept secrets around. These are a few of the ways we can continue to remember the special bond we share with our loved ones as we move forward in our living.

It needs to be said that sometimes, and for some people, it may not feel good to remember and focus on a loved one too much, especially in the early days following the loss. With the initial shock of the loss and intense feelings surrounding it, just to focus on other things for a while can feel like a relief. This is often a normal part of grief and a healthy way to deal with overwhelming circumstances. Rather than grieving all at once, we tend to do better by grieving in smaller, more manageable doses over time.

It is also good to remember that holding on to a loved one is not about trying to freeze time and live in the past. It’s about learning new ways to remember, honor and cherish our shared journey. It’s about affirming that our loved one’s presence will be with us in meaningful ways as we begin to take tentative steps forward. Holding on is not a fearful, desperate clinging to the past, but a hopeful and life-affirming step into the future. When we lose a loved one, our world feels shaken and even demolished forever. It will never be the same as it was. Yet, moving through the journey of grief, we can begin to find that a new world comes together in our living, and that our loved ones will have a deeply meaningful place in it.

horrible Katie looked, or even that she didn’t think she could handle it. The mistake was that she said those things to Pat. She dumped IN.

Complaining to someone in a smaller ring than yours doesn’t do either of you any good. On the other hand, being supportive to her principal caregiver may be the best thing you can do for the patient.

Most of us know this. Almost nobody would complain to the patient about how rotten she looks. Almost no one would say that looking at her makes them think of the fragility of life and their own closeness to death. In other words, we know enough not to dump into the center ring. Ring Theory merely expands that intuition and makes it more concrete: Don’t just avoid dumping into the center ring, avoid dumping into any ring smaller than your own.

Remember, you can say whatever you want if you just wait until you’re talking to someone in a larger ring than yours.

And don’t worry. You’ll get your turn in the center ring. You can count on that.

I believe in old women who learn new tricks — gutsy, wrinkled broads who eat alone in restaurants and pump their own gas.

When my father died six years ago, my mother, then 79, had already done quite a lot. She had moved from her hometown in Mississippi to work in the big city even though many of her generation stayed put. She had raised three daughters, chaired PTAs, volunteered for a host of causes and nursed her husband through heart surgery. Along the way, she lost a breast and part of her colon to cancer.

What she had not done before Daddy’s death, however, was pump her own gas. After the funeral, when she stopped the car at the filling station, neither of us moved. We were both waiting, I guess, for Daddy to wink at us before sliding out to “fill ‘er up.”

As I collected myself and turned to open the door, my mother said, “I guess you better show me how this works.”

After we finished she asked, “That’s it?” “Yes ma’am,” I said, “You’ll do fine.” I tried not to think of all the things my mother would now have to do by herself.

As we drove off, Mother told me about her old friend Betty Ann whose husband Carl had died recently. It seems Betty Ann got in the passenger seat of their new Buick and waited a full three minutes for Carl to appear behind the wheel before finally hauling herself to the other side of the car and driving downtown. Telling me this story, my mother was crying just a bit. She said, “I guess you do what you have to do.”

I did not marry until age 41, so I know about pumping gas and eating alone in restaurants. But I haven’t a clue what it’s like to lose your soul mate unexpectedly after 52 years of marriage, leaving you to deal not only with grief but also with car mechanics. Mother has always been a quick study, though, so it was not long before she could tell her widowed friends which Exxon had the lowest prices, which BP still offered full service, which Chevron was well lighted at dusk.

There have been other challenges for my mother, of course, since my father died. From downsizing the family home to allowing a widower preacher to “go Dutch” with her at the Olive Garden on occasion, my mother has put one foot in front of the other with grace and fortitude.

It is a small thing, perhaps, to believe in elderly women doing nothing more than putting gas into cars and getting themselves from point A to point B without an escort. But to my mind, and heart, it’s a belief in something much bigger than that: the guts to keep going.

Life isn’t promised to anyone. Nobody wants to think about leaving here, but the reality is everybody is going to—someday. Having dignity in dying can be just as valuable as having dignity while living. Making personal healthcare decisions is rarely an easy thing to do, especially when it pertains to end-of-life. My relative’s response need not be a common one. By choosing to gain a better understanding of one’s options and taking charge of one’s own health decision-making, those whom you care about and love most can honor your wishes if you are unable to speak for yourself. When people choose to talk about these subjects, they gain greater peace of mind, as well as provide comfort to those they love most during such times as our family experienced.

Gloria Thomas Anderson is a licensed master’s social work educator and the author of “The African-American Spiritual and Ethical Guide to End-of-Life Care—What Y’all Gon’ Do With Me?” This patient educational resource helps to increase awareness and understanding about end-of-life care options.

Regardless of ethnicity, age or socioeconomic status, the ability to make good decisions in healthcare and end-of-life care is often based on understanding and effective communication. Miscommunication can be a barrier, especially in these kinds of situations. My relative’s fears were significantly decreased once she understood that she was in control of her own life and that her wishes would be respected.

Optimally, we all should have conversations about healthcare decision-making before an emergency situation. Although questions such as “What would your wishes be if you were no longer able to speak or do for yourself?” are difficult to answer, they are important ones to consider so that we can remain in charge of our lives, right up ‘til we reach Heaven’s gate.

Sandy Spring Bank

With $4.1 billion in assets, Sandy Spring Bank is one of the oldest banking institutions in Maryland. Independent and community-oriented, Sandy Spring Bank was founded in 1868 and offers a broad range of banking and financial services. Visit www.sandyspringbank.com for more information.

At Sandy Spring Bank, we have a strong set of values that define who we are and allow us to remain a partner with the communities we serve. These values include giving back to the communities in which we operate. We know that businesses and communities are closely connected, and our company has a passion for playing an active role in making our world a better place. Through our community outreach efforts and current partnership, we engage, inspire and connect our clients and employees with organizations like Montgomery Hospice.

In keeping with that partnership, we were delighted to host our fourth annual Hearts for Hospice fundraising drive to benefit Montgomery Hospice. From Wednesday, September 11 to Friday, September 27, 2013, the bank offered Montgomery County clients the opportunity to make a donation to support to Montgomery Hospice. Since the launch of the Hearts for Hospice campaign, we are pleased to have raised more than $6,800 to support those who need it most. Many thanks to our clients and employees for making this initiative such a success! Thanks also to the caregivers at Montgomery Hospice for “gentling the journey” for our county neighbors and friends affected by life-limiting illnesses.

Warman Home Care, LLC

Started in response to our Founders’ desire to provide quality eldercare for their parents, Warman Home Care has been serving the community’s home care needs for more than 25 years. Caring for loved ones in their homes when doing it alone becomes too great a challenge has been our mission from the start. During our decades of service, we’ve been privileged to see firsthand the marvelous work of Montgomery Hospice in bringing true caring and aid to those dealing with end-of-life issues. Working closely with a shared community, we draw great inspiration from our association with Montgomery Hospice.

Supporting Montgomery Hospice Through Workplace Giving Campaigns and Employer Matching Gifts

Montgomery Hospice is grateful for your contributions, which enable us to care for patients who are uninsured or under-insured; offer bereavement support to anyone in the community who has experienced a loss; support the Montgomery Kids program; provide complementary therapies; and educate healthcare professionals and county residents about end-of-life care. Many Montgomery Hospice supporters choose to donate through payroll deduction. As a member of America’s Charities - Community First of Greater Washington DC, we participate in the Combined Federal Campaign (#85936), the Maryland Charity Campaign (#6242), and other public and private workplace giving programs. When your workplace campaign occurs, we encourage you to make a gift to Montgomery Hospice. It’s easy to participate each pay period and so helpful to our patients, their families and the community.

If you previously gave to Montgomery Hospice through the United Way, please consider sending your gift directly to us or donating through our website (montgomeryhospice.org/donate). You may still give through the United Way by following its instructions on how to donate to a non-United Way agency. You may need to write in our name and address, found on the back of this newsletter.

Matching Gifts

Whether you make a gift directly to Montgomery Hospice or through a workplace giving program, your employer may match your contribution, effectively doubling or tripling your gift! Ask your Human Resources department how to request a matching gift from your company.

Thank you in advance for your generous support.

Community Partners

We are grateful to our Community Partners who have supported Montgomery Hospice with a gift of $250 or more between February 1, 2013 and August 31, 2013.
